

CONTRIBUTORS

BRUCE BARBER is an artist and writer who teaches at the Nova Scotia College of Art and Design. He has exhibited his artwork internationally since 1972 and is a co-editor of Voices of Fire: Art Rage Power and The State (1996) and editor of Conceptual Art: The NSCAD Connection 1967–1973 (2002). His critical essays and reviews have appeared in various anthologies, journals and magazines, including Islands, FUSE, Borderlines, and A-R-C.

ELIZABETH BOYD lives and works in Halifax, Nova Scotia—a place she loves—and sometimes writes poetry.

BRAD BUCHANAN recently completed his PhD in English literature at Stanford University. His poems have appeared in many journals, including Grain, Canadian Literature, The Antigone Review, Descant, and Event.

ANTHONY CUNNINGHAM teaches philosophy at St. John's University, Minnesota, and has published essays and reviews in The American Philosophical Quarterly, Philosophy Research Archives, The Journal of Value Inquiry, Dialogue, Ethics, and Mind. He is also the author of The Heart of What Matters: The Role for Literature in Moral Philosophy (2001).

MICHAEL JOHN DISANTO is a PhD student in English at Dalhousie University. His research interests include nineteenth-century fiction and the interface between literature and philosophy.

MARK FARRELL is originally from Cape Breton, and has been living and teaching in the Czech Republic for over nine years. His work has appeared in many journals, including dANDelton, Hermes, Poetry International, and Icarus.

DAVID FEDO teaches English at Curry College, in Milton, Massachusetts, where he is also the academic dean. His poems have been published in Poetry East, Voices International, North Dakota Quarterly, Writers' Forum, and numerous other journals.

MOIRA MACDOUGALL is a former student of classical ballet and modern dance, and holds degrees in English, humanities, and psychology. Her poems have been published in the Hampden Sydney Poetry Review and The Dalhousie Review.

CORINA MARTIN-JORDACHE recently completed her PhD at the Centre for Comparative Literature, University of Toronto. Her research interests include modernism, postcolonialism, British literature, French literature, and cultural studies. She has published reviews and articles in Literary Research/Recherche Littéraire, The Samuel Beckett Newsletter, and The Centennial Review.

KAREN MCELREA has published poetry, short fiction, reviews, and creative non-fiction in Event, Geist, Wascana Review, The Prairie Journal of Canadian Literature, (EX)CITE, and many other journals.

DON MCLELLAN has worked as a journalist in Canada, South Korea, and Hong Kong. His fiction has appeared, or is due to appear, in The New Orphic Review, paperplates, Pottersfield Portfolio, and Descant.

CRAIG RUSSELL lives in Renfrewshire, Scotland, with his wife and two children, and works as a freelance writer.

INGRID RUTHIG is a poet, writer, architect, and an editor for lichen literary journal. Her work has recently appeared in Signal, SEEDS 5 poetry anthology (2001), and is forthcoming in the Windsor Review, The Harpweaver, and Kaleidoscope. She lives outside Toronto.

HAROLD SKULSKY teaches and writes at Smith College in Northampton, Massachusetts.

DANIEL TOBIN teaches English at Carthage College, Wisconsin, and is the author of Passage to the Center: Imagination and the Sacred in the Poetry of Seamus Heaney. His poetry has appeared in such journals as The Florida Review, Poetry, and The Paris Review. His book of poems, Where the World is Made, was co-winner of the Katherine Bakeless Nason Prize (1998), and he has a second book of poems forthcoming.

CAMERON TULLY teaches English and creative writing at Ross Sheppard High School in Edmonton, Alberta. He is the fiction and poetry editor of Freshcut, a magazine he created to promote the writing of Edmonton-area high school students. His own work has appeared in B&A: New Fiction and The Prairie Journal of Canadian Literature.