

THE DALHOUSIE REVIEW

CONTRIBUTORS

Michael Bishop teaches French at Dalhousie.

James Black is an English professor at the University of Calgary.

Robert Boardman is a political scientist teaching at Dalhousie.

Sebastian de Grazia is a professor at the Eagleton Institute of Politics of Rutgers University, where he teaches political philosophy in the graduate school.

James Gray, Chairman of the department of English at Dalhousie, is an Eighteenth-century specialist, with emphasis on Samuel Johnson.

David Herold is with the Communication Program, University of Minnesota.

Evelyn J. Hinz is a Killam Post Doctoral Research Scholar at the University of Manitoba.

Crawford Kilian teaches English at Capilano College in Vancouver.

Ruth M. Levitsky is an English professor at St. Jerome's College, University of Waterloo.

N.S. Poburko teaches English at Dalhousie.

C. F. Poole is Professor of philosophy at Mount Allison University and president of the Humanities Association of Canada.

Brian Swann teaches English at Princeton.

William R. Willoughby is a professor of political science at the University of New Brunswick.

Verse by Douglas Barbour, Edmonton; Henry Zaccarini, Halifax; James Cooper, Prospect Bay, N.S.; John Hicks, Prince Albert, Sask.; Elizabeth Jones, Cambridge Station, N.S.; Nigel Jenkins, Colchester, England; Robert Feinstein, Montreal; William V. Davis, Oak Park, Illinois; Duane Edwards, Rutherford, N.J.; Hugh Miller, Halifax.