

CONTRIBUTORS

William B. Bache, who teaches English at Purdue, has published poems and stories as well as various articles and a book on Shakespeare; he is presently at work on a study of design and closure in Shakespeare's major plays.

Janice P. Dickin McGinnis is a Ph.D. candidate in History at the University of Alberta.

Jane M. Filstrup, who has published widely as a freelancer, is at work on a Ph.D. in Library History at Columbia University.

F. Ronald Hayes teaches in the Department of Biology and the Institute for Resource and Environmental Studies at Dalhousie.

Mary Lu MacDonald, a resident of Halifax, is a doctoral student in History at Carleton University.

Jean Marquard teaches English at the University of the Witwatersrand. She has written extensively on South African literature both in South African journals and in the London Magazine and has given talks on South African topics on the BBC.

Ivan Melada teaches English at the University of New Mexico.

Ira Bruce Nadel teaches English at the University of B.C.

Patrick O'Flaherty teaches English at Memorial University of Newfoundland and is the author of The Rock Observed: Studies in the Literature of Newfoundland.

J.M. Reibetanz teaches English in St. Michael's College, University of Toronto.

Roland Stromberg is Professor of Modern European History at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and is the author, most recently, of An Intellectual History of Modern Europe.

Verse by: Tony Curtis, Barry, Wales; John Ditsky, Windsor; Susan So, Princeton, N.J.; Allan Cooper, Riverview, N.B.; Graeme Wilson, Hong Kong; George Ellenbogen, Lexington, Mass.; Ian MacLennan, Halifax; Alice MacKenzie Swaim, Harrisburg, Penn.; Barry Dempster, Toronto.