

CONTRIBUTORS

KRISAN L. EVENSON is a doctoral candidate in political science at the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University, where she teaches Canadian and Québec politics. She has presented papers to the American Political Science Association, the International Sociological Association, the American Council for Quebec Studies, the Association for Canadian Studies in the United States, and the New York State Political Science Association. Her research results have been published in Quebec Studies and in the Proceedings of the 1995 Maxwell Colloquium. In general, Krisan studies the relationship between political socialization and citizenship, concentrating on multilingual societies such as Canada. She is a founding member of the American Council on Québec Studies Newer Scholar Exchange Network Forum.

LOUIS MASSICOTTE teaches political science at Université de Montréal. He is the co-author of Le Scrutin au Québec: Un Miroir déformant (1985), and his articles have been published in Electoral Studies, European Journal of Political Research, Commonwealth and Comparative Politics, Canadian Journal of Political Science, Canadian Public Administration, Recherches sociographiques, and Revue québécoise de science politique. His research interests focus on parliaments and elections, and he has been involved in democratic development in Africa, Eastern Europe, and the Caribbean.

NELSON MICHAUD is a postdoctoral fellow and instructor in the Department of Political Science at Dalhousie University. His research has been recognized by the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada, the Canadian Federation for Humanities and Social Sciences, and the Fonds pour la Formation des chercheurs et l'aide à la recherche (Québec government excellence in research award). His work has appeared in such journals as Études internationales, Revue d'Histoire de l'Amérique française, and British Review of Canadian Studies. He is also the author of Praxis de la Science politique and L'Énigme du Sphynx: regards sur la vie politique d'un nationaliste (1910-1925). Prior to his academic career, Dr. Michaud worked for nine years with the federal government as a policy analyst, senior advisor, and legislative and executive assistant in the office of the President of the Privy Council.

SCOTT PIROTH is a doctoral candidate in political science at the American University in Washington, DC. He is currently writing his dissertation on Québec's independence movement. His work has appeared in Social Education (1996), and he co-authored (with Saul Newman) an article on ethnic terrorism, in Nationalism & Ethnic Politics (1996).

JENNIFER SMITH teaches political science at Dalhousie University. She has particular interests in issues surrounding Canadian federalism and comparative government, as well as electoral politics. Her recent publications include: "Entitlement versus Variance Models in the Determination of Canadian Electoral Boundaries" (with Ronald Landes), in International Journal of Canadian Studies (1998); "Third-Party Advertising and Electoral Democracy" (with Herman Bakvis), in Canadian Public Policy (1997); "Proportional Representation: Misrepresenting Equality" (with Peter Aucoin), in Policy Options (1997); "PR and Equity: There is no Guarantee" (with Peter Aucoin), in Policy Options (1998); and "Judicial Review and Electoral Law" (with Herman Bakvis), in Political Dispute and Judicial Review (forthcoming).

TRACY SUMMERVILLE teaches Canadian politics and political theory at the University of Northern British Columbia. She received her doctorate from Laval University in 1998 and her Master of Arts degree from the University of Western Ontario in 1994. Her interests include constitutional politics, identity politics, and participatory democracy.

MICHEL VASTEL worked for the Québec government and for the Conseil du Patronat before returning to journalism as a syndicated columnist for various newspapers, including Le Devoir, La Presse, and Le Soleil. He is also a regular contributor to the bi-weekly magazine, L'Actualité. He is the author of Le Neveu (1987), and has written political biographies of Pierre Elliott Trudeau (1989), Robert Bourassa (1991), and Lucien Bouchard (1995). He is currently attached to the Montréal bureau of Le Soleil, where he writes a column on national politics, with a particular focus on issues within anglophone provincial capitals.