CHRIS YURKOSKI

CROW WITH BONE: A SCHEMATIC

It picked it up
from the grass
in the sticks
and hooks of its claws.

It set itself up on the pricks
of a chain-link fence,
stared down like a dare
over the crooked pick of its beak.

It cracked at the bone
with hacks of one claw, broke—and then ripped
right into the marrow.