

THE SMOKE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE

On the Continental Departure Platform at Victoria Station, when a Boat Train is leaving, you will find for once in England a truly cosmopolitan scene. You will see Ministers of State, bound on His Majesty's business to foreign lands. Here are cheerful parties, with ski and ice axes, heading for Alpine snows. Here an elegant woman and her maid bent on a round of shopping in the Rue de la Paix, here again swarthy foreigners, homeward bound, bustling and gesticulating as they find their seats. The whistle screams; the train glides away . . . and soon the passengers are comfortably settled for the run through Kentish hop gardens to the Channel Ports. And in all the carriages, cigarettes are lighted up . . . Wills' Gold Flake, nine times out of ten.

The Pilot Doesn't Worry

Fifty below in the Arctic night—and a plane down, with a defective spark plug and an empty tank.

The spark plug can be replaced, but that won't help without gasoline to turn the motor—and the nearest "town" is a few Eskimos and a trading post across the lake at Blackfish Point.

But the pilot doesn't worry. He knows there is a cache of Imperial Gasoline at Blackfish, and someone there to help him.

The great wealth of Canada's north is being found from the air many years before it could be reached afoot, because men are willing to adventure and supplies are there when they are needed.

These supplies come from the Imperial Oil Refineries. By ship up through Hudson Strait into the Bay, by rail beyond the Pas, by paddle wheeler down the Peace and MacKenzie Rivers they go to distributing points. In winter, dog teams and sleds drag them further into the wilderness.

For fifty years Imperial Oil has been meeting the new needs of transportation and industry. Because it has met each need with enterprise and energy, Imperial has become a great company—serving every corner of Canada—its ships on the Atlantic and Pacific—its pipe-lines in the tropics.

Fifty years of constant enterprise are in the products Imperial Oil sells to-day.

Imperial Three Star and Imperial Ethyl are its best gasolines.

Which means that nothing finer can be put in your car.
